The Dynamic Structure of the Nb³⁺ and V³⁺ Active Matter Using a Bi-Metal Nanoparticle Mixed oxide-metal NPs are described that encapsulate the active Nb³⁺ and V³⁺ ions in their respective host matrixes. The optical properties of the mixed oxide hosts are rather superior to those of pure oxide hosts. The covalent oxide matrixes can be broken or transformed into cationic and anionic species by electrochemical means. From the mixed oxide hosts, the two cationic species are shown to be the V³⁺ and Nb³⁺ groups, respectively. The anionic host can be reversibly reduced to the constituent metal elements. The species in solution are characterised by absorption and emission spectra, by transient electrochemistry and by DLS. On the basis of steady-state electrochemistry measurements on a nanocontainer electrode and on the DLS measurements, a molecular film or 'solid-like' state for the Nb³⁺ species in Nb₂O₅/Alumina (Al₂O₃) is found as a possible model for the superparamagnetic 'solid', which is the thermodynamically stable state of the mixed oxide NPs./* Copyright 2018 The Kubernetes Authors.
